

Abstract

A method for determining the chemosensitivity of cells towards at least one substance by measuring the apoptosis induced by said at least one substance, wherein the cells are incubated essentially concurrently with at least one marker whose interaction with phosphatidylserine can be detected and with said at least one substance, and the interaction between the marker and phosphatidylserine is detected in a time-resolved manner.

09856185-090701